

'Educate against hate'

In 2016 an "educate against hate" website has been launched by the Education Secretary, as part of a renewed drive against extremism.

The anti-radicalisation website promises to provide "practical advice to protect children from the dangers of extremism", with information from the government and groups such as the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

It includes information on:

- warning signs of danger
- how parents should talk to children about extremism
- steps concerned parents can take educate.against.

~~hate~~

Messages of ~~hate~~ can take many forms. ~~Extremist~~ groups use them to recruit young people. Here you will find information to help you understand the issues and protect your child.

Please click on the link below for further information:

<http://educateagainsthate.com/parents>